11. Based on the estimated calculation (i.e. $62,000 for each $1 million of Medicare revenue) of money we should have received in Round 1, it looks like we received more than what we were supposed to receive. Do we need to return excess money?

Answer: The initial round of reimbursement was a rough estimate of additional reimbursement designed to be an initial “shot in the arm” to help healthcare providers. As long as the Terms and Conditions are followed, there is nothing in the Terms and Conditions (or other information and guidance from HHS) suggesting that money must be refunded if the total payment amount appears to be in excess.
